JUDGE AND MRS. ORVIS ROBBED OF VALUABLES

Apartments of Daughter, Mrs. Harvey, at Philadelphia, Looted.

LOSS IS ABOUT $1600

Thieves Work in Broad Daylight—"Betty" Orvis Loses $125 Wedding Dress—Husband's Overcoat and Father's Traveling Bag Stolen.

While visiting their daughter, Mrs. Lewis B. Harvey, at Philadelphia, last week, Judge and Mrs. Ellis L. Orvis, of this place, were robbed of valuable jewels and clothing. The thieves also took a dress owned by Mrs. Harvey, who will be recalled by her many friends here as formerly "Betty" Orvis, and whose wedding to Mr. Harvey occurred on Christmas evening.

Mrs. Orvis' trunk was broken open. Her losses included two bracelets, one valued at $400; two necklaces, a marquise ring, with diamonds and rubies, and a number of valuable pins. One of Mrs. Harvey's wedding dresses, valued at $125, was also stolen. Judge Orvis' traveling bag, and all its contents, was taken. The thieves also took Mr. Harvey's overcoat. The estimated value of the several articles stolen is $1,600.

The thieves worked leisurely in looting the apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey. The robbery was committed some time after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Harvey was at work. Judge and Mrs. Orvis and Mrs. Harvey were out shopping. When they returned they found the apartments in disorder, the trunk rifled and the articles noted gone. The thieves did not take a quantity of silverware, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey, and which was exposed in the room.

When they had taken all they wanted, the thieves escaped and have not been captured. Judge and Mrs. Orvis returned home on Tuesday evening, but if the thieves are apprehended, they will go to Philadelphia to identify the stolen articles.

HUNTINGDON PRESBYTERY

Rev. Dr. J. H. Mathers, of Mifflintown, is Chosen Moderator.

Upward of 100 ministers were in attendance at the session of the Huntingdon Presbytery, held in Bellefonte on Monday and Tuesday, last. Some idea of the territory embraced in the Huntindon Presbytery may be had from the fact that it is about the size of the state of New Jersey.

Rev. W. L. Whallon, of the Broad Avenue Church, Altoona, preached the Moderator's sermon. Rev. Dr. J. H. Mathers, of Mifflintown, was chosen Moderator.

The Presbytery dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. George T. Gunter and the First Presbeterian Church, of Tyrone. Mr. Gunter goes to a charge in his native state, Indiana. Rev. D. E. Hepler, formerly of Lemont, was released from the charge at Williamsburg. He will go to a town in the western end of the State. Calls were received and accepted by the following: Rev. R. L. Hallett, at South Altoona; Rev. W. C. Perez and Rev. W. C. Thompson, both from Princeton Theological Seminary, the former to go to Milroy and the latter to Reedsville; Rev. R. M. Jones, from Washington state, to Glen Ritchey.

Elder J. L. Summerville, of Winburne, formerly of Bellefonte, was re-elected trustee for a term of five years. The salary of J. E. Irvine, stated clerk, was increased from $75 to $100.

The following were elected commissioners to the General Assembly, to be held at Atlantic City, in May: Rev. J. F. Diener, of Waterford Mills; Rev. W. H. Schuyler, of Centre Hall; Rev. A. R. Day, of Alexandria, and also these elders—J. F. Ellsworth, of Williamsburg; William P. Humes, of Bellefonte, and F. P. Brewster, of Shirleysburg.

One of the most interesting features was the report of the Presbyterial Mission, having in charge the smaller and weaker churches of the Presbytery. This committee is working along the lines of the Country Life Commission, appointed by President Roosevelt, introducing industrial and sociological methods in their work. G. B. St. John, of New York, has just completed a sociological survey of the whole Presbytery, which is especially interesting. The Huntingdon Presbytery is being used as a basis for experimental work and many inquiries are being received from all parts of the country.

The principal address of the session was that by Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Moffett, of New York, who spoke on "Work Among American Indians". While Dr. Moffett is a resident of New York he has spent the greater part of his life in work among the Indians. His address was very interesting and instructive.

Of interest, especially to the residents of this community, was the memorial service for the late Rev. Dr. William Laurie, Rev. W. P. Benedict and James P. Harris.

COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY

Physicians Celebrate Thirty-fourth Anniversary on Tuesday.

The thirty-fourth anniversary of the Centre County Medical Society was celebrated at the annual meeting, held on Tuesday, last, at the Bush House. A large attendance was noted, including prominent physicians from several adjoining counties. Following an automobile tour of Bellefonte the physicians held their general business meeting. Addresses were delivered by Dr. John Berton Carnett, of Philadelphia; Dr. William B. Henderson, of Philipsburg; Dr. Orr H. Shaffer, of Altoona; Dr. Frances O. Ball, of Lock Haven, and Dr. Samuel C. Stewart, of Clearfield.

In the evening a banquet was served at the Bush House. The menu was one of the finest presented in Bellefonte in many years and was especially arranged by the proprietor, W. L. Daggett, for the occasion. Dr. J. L. Seibert was toastmaster. Those scheduled to respond to toasts were Dr. William S. Ross, of Altoona and Dr. Albert Nason, of Roaring Springs. Quite a number of others spoke briefly.

The guests included Dr. Joseph Corson, of Charlton; Dr. George G. Herman, of Huntingdon; Dr. S. J. McGhee, of Mill Hall; Dr. Samuel J. Waterworth, of Clearfield; Dr. H. Albert Blair, Curwensville; Dr. John Gordon, Clearfield; Dr. Toole, of Snydertown; Dr. M. A. Kirk, Bellefonte; Dr. Kipe, State College.

Clearfield county Prohibitionists have nominated a full county ticket, as follows: Congress, W. H. Watt, of DuBois; State Senator, S. B. Watts, of Kermoor; Assembly, W. H. Brown, of Osceola; T. B. Morgan, of DuBois, and Rev. Maurice Swartz, of Clearfield. The last name is an old Bellefonte boy.

IRATE WOMAN ATTACKS SHERIFF WITH CLUB

Mrs. Greene, of Huston Twp., Gave Hurley Warm Reception.

THREATENED TO SHOOT

Sheriff Had to Batter Down Door to Enforce Court Writ to Dispossess Greene Family From Property of J. W. Bruss, Near Julian.

A hand-to-hand struggle with an irate woman, and the latter threatening to shoot him if he entered the house, was the unpleasant experience of Sheriff Hurley, who, obeying the instructions of the court, was on Monday, last, compelled to eject the family and household effects of J. M. Greene from the property of J. W. Bruss, near Julian, in Huston township. Armed with a writ of "habere facias possessionem", Sheriff Hurley finally forced his way into the house, only to be attacked by Mrs. Greene, who was armed with a club. Physical force was necessary to subdue the woman, after which the household effects were removed and the property delivered into the possession of Bruss.

The incident was the most exciting which Sheriff Hurley has experienced since taking office. He had no alternative but to carry out the instructions of the court, but while it lasted the affair was fast and lively. Mr. Greene was not home at the time, but his wife demonstrated her ability to hold the fort, single-handed, during any ordinary skirmish.

It seems that there has been considerable friction between the Greene and Bruss families and that the ownership of the property in question has been a matter of frequent disputes. On Monday Sheriff Hurley was directed to eject the Greene family. Accompanied by H. H. Montgomery he drove to the property. Bruss also was on hand ready to remove the household effects of the Greenes beyond the boundaries of the property once they had been placed outside the house.

That there was trouble ahead was soon discovered by Sheriff Hurley, for Mrs. Greene, safely entrenched inside the house, defied him and threatened to shoot if he attempted to break down the door. Sheriff Hurley explained that he had no desire to force an entrance, but that if necessary he would do so. Mrs. Greene dared him to try it and Sheriff Hurley, securing a hatchet, promptly accepted the challenge. About twenty minutes of battering was necessary before the door gave way and then Sheriff Hurley stepped inside the house. Instead of carrying out her threat to shoot, Mrs. Greene made a rush for Sheriff Hurley with a club. Warding off one blow after another, the Sheriff finally seized the woman and threw her back into the room. He also notified her that further resistance would result in her arrest and being taken to jail. Mrs. Greene, realizing that the odds were too great, made no further attempt to hold possession of the house and her goods were quickly placed outside. Bruss, on hand with a wagon, hauled them to a point a few feet off his land.

With Bruss in full possession of the property, Mr. and Mrs. Greene later in the day gathered up their household effects and removed them to another house nearby.

SO NEAR TO DEATH CASKET WAS ORDERED

Remarkable Recovery of Mrs. Williams, of Martha, While in South.

A JOYFUL HOME-COMING

With Her Husband, is Warmly Greeted By Neighbors—Lay in Florida Hospital Eleven Weeks With Malarial Typhoid Fever.

A home-coming is a happy event at any time, but that of Mr. and Mrs. W. Shedrick Williams, of Martha, who returned home on Monday evening from Florida was an especially interesting event. But a short time ago she was so ill in Florida, that no one thought she could recover. All her many friends were deeply interested in her case and when it became known that she had rallied and was getting better there was rejoicing in and about Martha. When she returned, still weak, but undoubtedly on the road to recovery, her friends were genuinely glad and quite a few called to pay their respects. Mr. and Mrs. Williams, after going South finally located in Florida, where the former engaged in the real estate business. He was meeting with success when Mrs. Williams was stricken with malarial typhoid fever and removed to a hospital, twenty miles from St. Cloud. At one stage of her illness, the physicians informed Mr. Williams, while at St. Cloud, that his wife's condition was absolutely hopeless, that nothing could save her and since St. Cloud was the only town near the hospital, it would be for the best for him to arrange to have his wife's body prepared for burial. Mr. Williams accordingly arranged for the purchase of a casket and proceeded with the physicians to the hospital.

At the undertaking establishment, at the time, was the body of the nurse who had cared for Mrs. Williams and who had been seized with the disease and died. When Mr. Williams arrived at the hospital his wife was so low that her death was expected at any time. To the surprise of all, however, she rallied and gradually became better. She continued to regain her strength and two weeks ago she was able to leave the hospital.

In the short interval, from the time of her discharge from the hospital and her arrival home, Mrs. Williams gained twenty pounds in weight. It was not until she was safely at her old home at Martha that her husband acquainted her with the facts of his arrangements for her funeral and the purchase of the casket. As she listened to the recital tears coursed down her cheeks. Her illness had come on so suddenly that she said the last thing she could remember was the preparation of some meat for dinner. When she regained consciousness, she was at the hospital, having passed through the crisis and then being on the way to recovery.

Had illness not overtaken his wife, Mr. Williams would probably have realized a neat sum in the real estate business in Florida. Even so, he returned with no financial loss, and this despite the fact that his wife was in the hospital for eleven weeks. When the train rolled into Martha Mr. Williams was the happiest man in the world, and what is more, he said so.

MOOSE LODGE BANQUETS

Bellefonte's Newly Formed Organization Has Big Celebration.

Everybody in Bellefonte was a Moose on Tuesday evening. The newly organized Lodge of Moose, for Bellefonte, celebrated its remarkable success in taking into membership 286 men in the last few months and before the charter list has been closed. Early in the evening a street parade was held. With a band at the head and the members of the lodge marching by twos, the parade proceeded out Allegheny Street and down Lamb Street to the Armory, where initiation exercises were conducted by James J. Davis, Supreme Organizer, assisted by James Craig, Assistant Secretary of Internal Affairs, and A. S. Fisher, former Congress J. D. Hicks and Thomas H. Greevy, all of Altoona.

It was almost 11 o'clock when the meeting at the Armory was brought to a close and all adjourned to the spacious dining room of the Brockerhoff House, where a buffet lunch was served. Captain Hugh S. Taylor was toastmaster and delivered a splendid address. Toasts were responded to by the several visitors. All present had a most delightful time and voted the Moose the only animal on earth.

GOOD ROADS CRUSADE IN TOWN AND COUNTY

Automobilists Want Breakers and Loose Stones Removed.

IS UP TO SUPERVISORS

Bellefonte Motor Club Plans to Explain Road Law and Institute Proceedings for all Violations—To Report on Town Streets.

A general crusade for the removal of loose stone from public roads is to be inaugurated by the Bellefonte Motor Club. Road supervisors will be communicated with, the law on the subject explained and notice served that violations will be met with prosecutions.

This program was adopted at the annual meeting of the club, held at the Brockerhoff House on Monday evening. The present officers were unanimously re-elected, as follows: Robert F. Hunter, president; John S. Walker, vice president; M. I. Gardner, secretary, and Frank E. Naginey, treasurer. One of the most gratifying reports presented was that by Treasurer Naginey, showing a neat balance in the treasury with which to start the new fiscal year.

Following the business meeting, a banquet was served, which was quite in keeping with the high standard of the Brockerhoff House and which was greatly enjoyed by all present.

Rishel's hill, in Benner township, is one of the roads of which the automobilists complain most. The roads in several other townships also received considerable criticism, but none more than the streets in Bellefonte.

Colonel W. Fred Reynolds, N. B. Spangler and Captain Hugh S. Taylor were appointed a committee to communicate with supervisors in regard to the care of roads.

A committee, consisting of Dr. J. L. Seibert, chairman; Charles R. Kurtz, Hugh Crider and President Hunter will make a tour of inspection of the streets in Bellefonte and will invite Dominique Judge, chairman of Council's Street Committee, to accompany them. Later a report will be presented to Council, giving specific information as to the condition of streets and also calling attention to the laws relating to the care of roads.

Has Novel Mascot.

About the most novel mascot of any corporation is that proudly listed among the assets of the Central Railroad of Pennsylvania. The mascot makes its home in the caboose of the extra freight train and incidentally makes two trips daily between Bellefonte and Mill Hall. Now and then the mascot has been known to walk out onto the caboose platform as the train passes Hecla Park or some of the other especially attractive points along the road. Regardless of how fast, or slow, the train may be running the mascot makes no attempt to escape; in fact, it seemingly prefers train life to any other. Some time ago "Billy." Royer caught a strange animal in his chicken coop. He hit it with an axe and later hit it again, this time on the head. He carried the animal to the Central Railroad station, at Bellefonte, and exhibited it to the train men there. They pronounced it a ferret. "Billy." suggested that the animal beskinned and added that its hide would be worth anywhere from $2 to $50. He pointed with pride to his strength in being able to kill the animal without so much as calling in the neighbors to help. Somehow, the animal failed to pass in its chips. After "Billy". had started away, the animal pricked up its ears, blinked an eye and cautiously crawled into the freight caboose, which happened to be standing nearby. They fed it and from that day to this the ferret had made its home in the caboose. There was a rumor in railroad circles a day or two ago that the ferret would shortly be promoted to the post of conductor. Every now and then, it is said, the ferret steals out for a ride in the engine, apparently looking for the occupant of a vacant seat.

Enjoyed Straw Ride.

When the young folks of Hannah undertake anything, especially a social function, it is invariably a delightful success. On Wednesday evening, of last week, a jolly party of young folks from that pretty town enjoyed a straw ride to Tyrone, where they spent a most delightful time at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Woomer. In the party were Misses Bess Peters, Estella Peters, Della Lewis, Linnie Weaver, Ruth Lego, Edith Newman, Mary Miller and Roy Nearhooff, Alonza Nearhoff, Elmer Nearhoff, Raymond Beckwith.

MOST REPTILES HARMLESS

But Four Distinct Species of Poisonous Snakes in this Country.

Away back in prehistoric, preglacial, pre-almost-anything days, and, no doubt, with first remembered impressions, perhaps even before we walked upright, for other animals poisons it also, the antipathy for serpents took root in the human mind, says a writer in Collier's Weekly. The barefooted savage dodges wide or jumps high when he encounters any sort of a reptile and naturally enough, for he knows nothing of those fine distinctions that mark the poisonous from the harmless kinds. The modern rustic, quite as green, is prone to think all snakes "pizen," and his list of the pernicious species far outnumbers the others, if, indeed, there are any not dangerous. Few men, with the charity of the banished duke, can see any virtue in a snake as he saw in ". . . . the toad, ugly and venomous," although he resorted, as is usually done, to some silly legend for his notion. But to be just, there are men who protect snakes, though generally for a useful purpose, keeping them about the spring-house, barns, or mill to destroy rats and mice.

The fear of snakes is no greater with women than with men, in either case it is generally an inborn repugnance, an abhorrance for anything that is cold, clammy and creeping. It is an aversion that is carried further and with more unworthiness for intelligent being then any other prejudice imaginable. I have known some big, powerful men, afraid or nothing else, who would tremble and turn white when shown even a captive snake. In spite of so-called congenital impressions, this is generally inexcusable, and it can be and should be overcome, for the very simple reason of dispensing with a certain amount of discomfort. Perhaps the writer may be allowed to make a boast that he is one who has overcome an inherent dislike for all creeping things, having had in childhood an aversion to caterpillars, spiders, lizards and snakes, but a general interest in the beauty of nature gradually extended to all creatures, and from that and through force of will an attempt was made to understand the true character of all lowly things. Since then he has camped on the trail of the snake coward for the pure purpose of bringing him into court, and by making an example of his misconceptions to relieve the congested ignorance in the minds of the unlearned.

Briefly there are but four district species of polygmous snakes in the United States—the rattlesnake (of several kinds), the copperhead, the black water moccasin, and the harlequin snake. All others are absolutely harmless, all numerous, unfounded, credulous and imaginative, but no less determined assertions to the contrary notwithstanding. Venomous snakes have fangs through which they eject poison into the flesh of the victim. All snakes have many small, prey-catching teeth, like needle-points, and most of them have no other weapons. They do not have stings in their tails, nor horns in their heads, their soft, thread-like, forked tongues are not "stingers;" they cannot squeeze tightly enough around one's arm to become over uncomfortable, and no species takes its tail in its mouth and rolls along the ground like a hoop. But each and every snake might be more dangerous than a stick of dynamite stuck into a football, to judge from the ideas held by most persons regarding them.

A North Carolina mountaineer insisted that copperhead snakes were common in his country. "Yes, suh, we uns hez 'em hyer in these hyer mountings an' they is sholy pizen. They have a leetle yaller ring-like 'roun' theath necks.

A couple of days later, coming from the trout stream to a late dinner, I chanced upon and picked up a small ring-necked snake (Diadophis). Quite innocently and with the gentle little thing squirming in the hand I eagerly held out, I advanced through the gate and up the flat stone walk. The family, three stalwart sons included, were waiting for me on the cabin porch, but on observing my captive they quickly retreated within. As I entered the house they crowded through the back door, and, as I still advanced, they scattered in every direction over the yard. At any moment they expected me to be seized with convulsions, and they warned me, pleaded with me, and even threatened me; I must cast the reptile from me and kill the vile thing. I took it away and let it go, but for hours afterward they watched me closely; fully expecting dire results from my daring; I could not correct the impression. Eventually they insisted that I must bear a charmed life, and that was all the credit I received for trying to impart some useful information. Little collared snakes are common enough in the locality, and I suspect that whole family is dodging and stoning them yet.

SIGNAL INSTRUCTION CARS

Pennsylvania Railroad Will Use Them on all Divisions.

To increase the efficiency of the men operating its trains, the Pennsylvania Railroad has determined to adopt the use of signal instruction cars on all of its divisions. The divisions on the main line between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh have just been equipped.

The company realizes that safety of operation depends upon its employes having a thorough knowledge of all signals, and it has been decided that explicit personal instructions shall be given frequently to enginemen, firemen, conductors and trainmen. The instructions to be given in this signal car will include not only block and interlocking signals, but other signals used in the movement of trains.

The Pennsylvania's new signal instruction cars are 60 feet long, divided into two compartments. One room will be used for examinations, while the other will contain a table upon which is to be placed under a glass cover a large track chart of the railroad, which can be rolled back and forth by means of rollers placed at each end. This chart shows all main running tracks, switches, crossovers, all signals, track troughs, stations and mile posts. The men will be given an opportunity to study this chart prior to passing an examination on it. Each car is provided with a set of model signals, which can be manipulated so as to show the signals indications the men receive out on the road.

The cars are in charge of examiners, each of whom has and an assistant. They will have charge of all examinations, with the exception of those on machinery and air brakes. The cars may also be used for examination of employes on other subjects than signals, such as train rules.

CURED TO STAY CURED

How a Bellefonte Citizen Found Complete Freedom From Kidney Troubles.

If you suffer from backache—
From urinary disorders
From any disease of the kidneys,
Be cured to stay cured
Doan's Kidney Pills make lasting cures.
Bellefonte people testify.
Here's one case of it.

Hiram Fetterhoff, 28 W. Bishop St., Bellefonte, Pa., says: "I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills, knowing them to be a first-class kidney remedy. For some time I was annoyed by irregular passages of the kidney secretions and reading that Doan's Kidney Pills were a specific for kidney complaint, I procured a supply at Green's Pharmacy Co. Their use relieved me and I am now in much better condition. Doan's Kidney Pill are certainly an effective kidney medicine." (Statement given October 21, 1907.)

No cause for complaint since. When Mr. Fetterhoff was interviewed on November 22, 1909 he said:" I willingly confirm my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought me has been permanent and I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past two years."

The Sound Sleep of Good Health.

The restorative power of sound sleep can not be over estimated and any ailment that prevents it is a menace to health. J. L. Southers, Eau Claire, Wis., says:—"For a long time I have been unable to sleep soundly nights, because of pains across my back and soreness of my kidneys. My appetite was very poor and my general condition was much run down. I have been taking Foley's Kidney Pills but a short time and now sleep as sound as a rock. I eat and enjoy my meals, and my general condition is greatly improved. I can honestly recommend Foley's Kidneys Pills as I know they have cured me."—C. M. Parrish.

For Cleaning Ivory Ornaments.

To clean ivory ornaments, first brush them well with a soft tooth-brush, using lukewarm water and a little soap; then rinse them in water of the same temperature, dry with a cloth and a brush till the luster reappears. Pour a little alcohol upon the brush, and should the ivory have become yellow, drying it in a gentle heat is recommended. I have tried this process many times, and have always had the greatest success.—From Woman's Home Companion for April.

Edith Had Overheard.

One Philadelphia newspaper man has a little daughter with whom he sometimes finds it necessary to be a trifle severe. Particularly is this true when the hour for going to bed comes around each night.

Last night the clock struck 8, and the father watched his three-year-old play on in a conscious effort to appear unconcerned.

"Edith, do you know it is your bedtime?" he asked.

Edith dropped the playthings and walked over to her father with very sober mien.

"If this thing is to continue night after night I suppose I'll have to submit to it," she said.

The newspaper man waited until his offspring had climbed the stairs to be tucked away by her mother, and when the latter returned to the room where he was sitting he said:

"Let's have our little spats in private hereafter."

His wife agreed. — Philadelphia Times.

Arabian Coffee.

The Arabian coffee maker, having prepared his fire of charcoal and placed near it a huge pot containing water, takes a few handfuls of green coffee berries, carefully culls out all imperfect berries and foreign substances and then places the best of the berries in an iron ladle held over the fire. The berries are permitted to roast until they begin to smoke and are then, while still uncharred, placed in a small mortar and carefully brayed with a pestle closely fitting the cup of the mortar. The berries are not, however, reduced to a dust. While this process has been going on a small pot has been half filled with tepid water from the large pot and placed over the fire. When the water in the small pot has begun to boil the broken coffee berries are thrown in, and the boiling is permitted to go on for a short time, the decoction being stirred with a spoon when it shows signs of boiling over. The coffee is then served in small cups without cream or sugar.

African Snakes.

The African cobra is regarded somewhat reverently by the natives of that country, who once a year kill a cobra de capello and hang its skin to the branch of a tree, tail downward. Then all the children born during the last year are brought out and made to touch the skin. This, the parents think, puts them under the serpent's protection. The cobra de capello divides with the horned viper of Africa the questionable honor of being the "worm of the Nile," to whose venomous tooth Cleopatra's death was due. The Kaffirs use the venom of this snake's cousin, the puff adder, to poison their arrows, and when they have any small quantity left they swallow it, having a theory that it will protect them from the bad effects of future bites. The Snake tribe of the Punjab say that the bites of snakes do not hurt them, and if they find a dead serpent they dress it in clothes and give it a superb funeral.

Beards In England.

It was about 1855 that the beard movement took hold of the English people. The Crimean war had much to do with it. The soldiers were permitted to forego the use of the razor, as the hair on the face protected them from the cold and attacks of neuralgia. About this period only one civilian of position in England had the hardihood to wear a mustache. This was George F. Muntz, member of parliament for Birmingham. The enlightened electors, however, did not take kindly to the bearded politician. An officer candidate on one occasion received an intimation from the leader of his party that his mustache might prejudice him in the eyes of the rural population. The candidate replied that he was "determined to face it out."—Westminster Gazette.

Circular Talk.

The judge's son had just finished his course in law and came home triumphantly with his sheepskin in a fine frame. The old judge turned to his son with some wholesome advice. "My son, when you have a case in court and your opponent has the law on his side, you must talk facts, and when he has the facts on his side you must talk law." The young man sat and pondered awhile and then asked, "Father, what must a fellow do when his opponent has both the law and the facts on his side?" The judge looked wise and replied, "Just talk around and around, my son."—Success Magazine.

Died In Place of a Younger Man.

A charge was made at a wall lined with French infantry. Sergeant McQuade of an English regiment saw two Frenchmen level their muskets on rests against a gap in a bank awaiting the appearance of an enemy. Sir George Brown, then a lad of sixteen, started to ascend at the fatal point. "You are too young, sir, to be killed," said McQuade, pulling him back and stepping into his place. He fell dead, pierced with both bullets.

BRANDED BY TARTARS.

A Greek Robber Who Was Tattooed From Head to Foot.

A remarkable case of tattooing came to light in Professor Hebra's lecture room in a hospital in Vienna a number of years ago. The man was the subject of a lecture, and one of the spectators at first mistook him for a bronze statue. He was tattooed from head to foot, and not a quarter of a square inch of his entire person was intact.

The skin presented an appearance resembling the tracery of an exceedingly rich cashmere shawl. The coloring was done with indigo principally, with enough red inserted here and there to give it effect. His name was George Constantine, a Greek by birth, who with a band of robbers entered Chinese Tartary to commit depredations. The gang was captured, and this man, with others, was ordered by the ruler to be branded in this manner.

On the palms of his hands letters were tattooed which explained that he was "the greatest rascal and thief in the world." It took three months to tattoo him, the indigo being pricked into the skin. The designs represented elephants, lions, tigers and birds, with letters worked in between. A couple of dragons ornamented his forehead. He said his body swelled up very much at the time and ever since had been sensitive to changes in the weather.—Westminster Gazette.

A DELICATE HINT.

The Present Girard Sent to One of His Ship Captains.

One of the sea captains in the employ of Stephen Girard, the founder of Girard college, had a rural Yankee's fondness for whittling with his jackknife and on one trip succeeded in getting away with a large part of the rail, although, feeling that he was not without the artistic sense, he really regarded the rail as greatly improved in appearance. When the vessel came to Philadelphia, Girard went aboard, made a general inspection in the captain's absence and as he was about to return to shore asked one of the seamen who had been cutting the rail. The seaman told him the captain and then, afraid his telling might have unpleasant consequences were the captain to learn of it in a roundabout way, informed that official of the interview with Girard. The captain was in terror of a reprimand, but, hearing nothing from his employer, supposed the incident closed. As he was about weighing anchor ready to leave port a dray loaded with shingles drove down to the wharf, and the driver hailed the vessel.

"There must be some mistake!" shouted the captain. "Our bill of lading doesn't mention shingles."

"This is where they belong," sung back the driver. "Mr. Girard himself told me to deliver them. He said they are for the captain to whittle."

Self Examination.

Every man's life is an imperfect sort of circle which he repeateth and runneth over every day. He hath a set of thoughts, desires and inclinations which return upon him in their proper time and order and will very hardly be laid aside to make room for anything new and uncommon, so that call upon him when you please to set about the study of his own heart and you are sure to find him pre-engaged. Either he has some business to do or some company that he must entertain or some cross accident hath put him out of humor and unfitted him for such a grave employment. And thus it cometh to pass that a man can never find leisure to look into himself, because he doth not set apart some portion of the day for that very purpose, but foolishly deferreth from one day to another until his glass is almost run out and he is called upon to give a miserable account of himself in the other world.—Dean Swift.

A Pheasant's Blind Flight.

Speaking of the habits of pheasants, Bailey's Magazine says:

"A very curious incident was recorded in October, 1896. A hen pheasant was flushed in a field of turnips, and as she got up flew into a piece of rotten, wet leaf, which clung around her head, completely enveloping it and blindfolding her. She kept ahead to wind, so that the wet leaf still remained plastered over her eyes, and in this plight fluttered higher till she became exhausted and gradually sank to earth again.

"The frequency with which pheasants fly through windows, sometimes with fatal results, is thought to be due to the bird in its haste being deceived by the reflection in the glass of the landscape behind it."

Sledgehammer Education.

The teacher of one of the grades in a primary school was astonished to receive the following communication from the parent of a pupil:

A Courtier In Blue Flannel.

A fine yacht lay at anchor awaiting a favorable breeze for her mission of pleasure. The crew idled about the deck, and a happy group of guests was aft conversing pleasantly. In the group was a handsome mother. Her romping boy of five years broke from her hand, clambered to the rail, rolled over it and was whirled down the tide. The mother's shrieks roused a dozing, lounging sailor, who at once comprehended the situation and plunged after the child. Others promptly manned a boat and soon overhauled the sailor, who was now swimming with the little fellow in his grasp. As soon as they returned to the yacht's deck the mother, with streaming eyes, threw her arms around the neck of the dripping rescuer and fervently exclaimed: "Oh, oh, sir, how, how can I ever repay you? Name your own reward for giving back my son and saving me from a broken heart!"

Then she pressed a half score of kisses on the tar's weather bronzed cheeks.

"Lady," answered he as she released him, "let the youngster go overboard again!"

The Test of a Wedding Ceremony.

A certain young pastor was planning with a young couple the steps in a marriage ceremony when the bride suddenly remarked, "Don't you make me promise to obey him."

"You ought to have some head to your family," replied the minister.

Then, turning to the groom, he asked, "Will you promise to obey her?"

"Not much, I won't!"

"What then? Do you expect me to tie you two together and leave you to fight it out afterward?"

"Isn't that the way they generally do?"

After a moment's thought the clergyman answered: "I will tell you what I will do. I will use the same ceremony that was used at my wedding. Neither party promises to obey the other in that, and it has worked well in our case."

"I don't know," said the young man, doubtfully gazing at the top of the minister's head, already becoming bald. "If it is going to work on my head as it has on yours I don't believe that I want to try it."

The First Great Bank.

The first great bank in the world was the bank of Venice, established in 1157 when the queen city of the Adriatic was the head of the commerce of the western world. At that time the great current of the trade between Europe and Asia passed through the Persian gulf and the Red sea to Alexandria, Egypt, and was carried in ships across the Mediterranean sea and through the Adriatic to Venice, where it was distributed to various parts of Europe. Venice was a sort of autocratic republic, founded and supported by its merchants, who were famed throughout the world for their wealth and reliability. They founded their bank, which was guaranteed by the government and was held in high credit in all the great cities on the routes of trade. The word "bank" was derived from the Italian word "banco," a bench or counter over which the business was transacted.—Argonaut.

A Giant Among Dwarfs.

The intellect and genius of Franklin were perhaps never more manifest than when, as the colonial agent of Pennsylvania, he appeared before the British house of commons in order to undergo an inquisition into the taxation questions which were brewing the trouble which subsequently resulted in American freedom. Not fewer than 300 questions were propounded to him by some of the acutest legal and political minds of the old country. To each and every one of them he replied in a masterful manner. Edmund Burke in commenting on the matter said that Franklin reminded him of "a man being examined by a parcel of schoolboys," while Charles James Fox remarked that his inquistors were "dwarfs in the hand of a giant."

The Unknown World.

Notwithstanding the rapid advance of exploration in various parts of the globe it is estimated that about 20,000,000 square miles of the earth's surface remain yet unexplored. The largest unexplored area is in Africa, 6,500,000 miles, but even North America contains 1,500,000 square miles of virgin territory. Most persons will be surprised to learn that there is three times as much land awaiting the foot of the pioneer in North America as in South America.—Chicago Tribune.

BOXING BOUTS IN GERMANY.

Amusing Scenes at Amateur Championship Tourney in Berlin.

Boxing is practically a forbidden sport in Germany. It is looked upon as brutal and repulsive and all efforts to introduce a systematic study of the "noble art of self-defense" have, owing to the unfavorable attitude of the press and the police, ended in failure, says the Pall Mall Gazette. One of the reasons for the strenuous opposition of the police is because in Germany it is a serious offense to strike a man with one's fist, no matter what the grievance may be.

Hence the citizens of the great towns, though prone to indulge in wordy contests accompanied by a tremendous exhibition of excitement and indignation, rarely come to blows, and the police believe that if a knowledge of boxing became general throughout the Fatherland there would be a great many more arrests for brawling, and incidentally it might lead the members of Socialist street demonstrations to adopt a more aggressive attitude toward the police, instead of their present attitude of almost lamb-like submission to the stalwart spike-helmeted and sword-begirded officers of the law.

Recently the first meeting took place to box for the amateur championships of Berlin in feather, light, middle and heavy weights. It was decided on a Sunday evening and presented many features of distinct interest.

In the first place, owing to police instructions, the rules issued to all the combatants contained a notice that they were not to hit too hard, and that any one who did so would be disqualified. Representatives of the law were present to see that these instructions were carried out.

A stage had been erected at one end of a large hall, and the spectators down below sat around drinking beer and other liquors. During the first round of the lightweights two competitors mixed it up, with the result that a small quantity of blood appeared.

The women, of whom there were many among the spectators, seemed rather moved, and when the bout was over the prompter came forward on the stage and addressing the spectators said that they must not mind if a small amount of blood were seen, as it meant nothing, did not hurt, and, in fact, the competitors, far from disliking it, rather enjoyed the novel sensation.

Below the platform and in front of the spectators was a band. During the intervals the band was always silent, but immediately a round commenced the band began to play some martial or playful piece, and many of the combatants, who probably were more at home in a ball room than in the ring, introduced into their leg work a dancing movement which, though slightly comical to the eye of a sportsman, filled the spectators with glee and one boxer in particular, who not only took his leg work, but also his hitting ones from the band, brought the house down with applause.

One lightweight who hit his opponent on the nose with such force that the latter sat on the floor was promptly warned that the next time such a thing happened he would be ruled out. The man who sat on the floor retired. Another boxer, apparently a favorite, stopped in the middle of a round to wave his gloves at the spectators, who were distracting him by cheering too much.

A local paper, commenting on the match, said it ought never to take place; that boxing was a sport fit only for hooligans; and that Englishmen could fight and box among themselves to their hearts content but that Germans did not wish to indulge in such brutal pastimes.

Incidentally, the heavyweight championship of Berlin was won by Tom Alasson, an Englishman, whose brother, Capt. Alasson, is the holder of the Plunging championship of England.

Nowhere Else.

The new minister was making his first pastoral call. There had been an addition that day to little Helen's family of dolls, and an introduction followed. Pleased with its reception she announced with pride that the doll was a birthday present.

"And how old are you, my dear?" inquired the clergyman kindly.

"Five years old," was the reply.

"Ah then you haven't lived long in this world." was the rejoinder.

"I've lived here all my life," she protested gravely—From Woman's Home Companion for April.

The Hand of Buddha

Story of an Ivory Box and What It Contained.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

When John Lawrence was in China he sent me, among other curios, a quaint little box of carved ivory. It was a beautiful specimen of the carver's art—an airy fabric of delicately wrought flowers, queer birds and impossible fishes. If the box really had an opening the fastening was so artfully concealed that I could not find it.

One night some months later, on returning home from the theater, I found my studio brilliantly lighted and Lawrence occupying a big chair before the smolder'ng fire.

"I returned today," he said in reply to my delighted greeting. "Been waiting here since 9 o'clock for you. Your man said you had gone to the theater."

"Yes," I replied, donning a dilapidated smoking coat. "I have been to see 'Nanette' and incidentally saw Miss Farnham."

"We are to be married in May," he said without turning his head.

I swallowed my astonishment, for I had not known they were engaged and, in fact, was deeply interested in pretty Miss Farnham myself. In spite of my chagrin I managed to congratulate him warmly, and, joining him before the now replenished fire.

"Where is that ivory box I sent you, Dick?"

Surprised and somewhat embarrassed, I made no reply, but went to the cupboard and brought the heavy little box to the table.

"What the deuce is the matter with you?" he asked sharply as the box struck the table with a hollow, empty sound.

"Just what I want to know," I replied crossly.

He stretched out his hand for the box and tried to raise it from the table, and then, as if surprised at its resistance, he arose and lifted it with both hands, looking at me queerly. As he dropped the box and we heard the hollow rattle as it struck the table we both laughed nervously and resumed out seats, he staring into the fire with wide open, startled eyes. Presently he spoke:

"That box was given to me by a wealthy Chinaman whom I have good reason to believe hated me intensely—perhaps with reason. It was such a dainty bit of carving that I could not resist accepting it. In fact, I really could not do otherwise without infringing their elaborate social laws. When he gave it to me old Van Ping told me of another pretty bit of carving, owned by his brother, a Chefu merchant. He gave me a strip of red paper covered with hieroglyphics and told me that on presenting it to his brother, the merchant, I could obtain the cherished curio. I went to my room in Parkerson's bungalow—you know I was staying with Parkerson—and placed the box before me on the table. It did not weigh more than a few ounces. A moment later my China boy entered and uttered a cry of fear when he saw the box, which he seemed to recognize. He threw himself upon his knees and begged me to take the box away; that it was accursed and that ill luck would fall upon me and all my house if I harbored it a moment. When I laughed at him and told him about the ivory hand that had been promised to me I thought he would go out of his mind. He pleaded that I would at least send the box to America before going down to Chefu after the other curio. Perhaps I was a little impressed by his actions; but, anyway, my curiosity was aroused, and so I agreed, and he happily packed the little box among your case of goods and watched with great satisfaction while the coolies rolled the case into the hold of the ship. The day after that I went down to Chefu and secured the 'hand of Buddha,' as the old man called it. He was a sly old beggar and up to some devilry, I was positive, though not a muscle of his oily, yellow countenance moved when I presented my letter. The hand I have brought home with me, and, in spite of my China boy's warning that I would suffer unimaginable ill fortune if I ever brought the two objects, the hand and the box, together, it is my intention to do that very thing tonight. The hand is packed in my bag, and I want you to come around to my rooms now and bring the box, and we will find what in the devil that old rascal was up to if it wasn't all bosh."

I assented reluctantly enough, for I was rather bored by the mysterious box and just a bit down in the mouth about the news of his engagement.

"Now that you have consented," he said coolly, "I'll read you the letter which Van Ping sent to his brother. Of course these chaps exercise a lot of hocus pocus in all their affairs, and I was somewhat amused at the idea of their evident desire to work me up into a fright. After the old merchant had read the letter I had it translated. It seemed to throw the translator into a spasm as he read it." He drew from a letter case a thin strip of red paper and slowly read: "'Give to the accursed American the hand of Buddha. He has the sacred box. The serpent grows rapidly.'"

The clocks were striking 2 as we left my studio and made our way through the deserted streets to Lawrence's rooms. The unusual events of the evening had combined to upset my nerves, and it was with a vague feeling of dread that I accompanied him on what seemed a fool's errand. Yet there was a decidedly uncomfortable feeling that I could not suppress. Twice I looked behind me quickly, and twice I saw nothing but the long, sharp shadows cast by the electric lights. Lawrence seemed unconscious of my mental excitement, for he strode quietly by my side with bent head and hands in his pockets. It was a relief to get into the warmly lighted vestibule, for there I no longer heard the imaginary soft pad-pad of feet behind us. I had carried the box in a hand bag, and its weight was such that I was glad to turn it over to my host, who excused himself and disappeared into the smoking room. Presently he returned.

I saw that something was on his mind.

"See here, Dick," he began seriously, "Grace—Miss Farnham—is not aware of my return. If I should be taken ill or anything she must not know the circumstances. Give her this letter, which will explain enough. If nothing happens forget it all like the good fellow you are." And as he clasped my hand and looked into my eyes I knew that he had guessed my secret.

"Now for the hand of Buddha," he cried, with a laugh, and together we entered the handsome smoking room. It was a large room, crowded with treasures from every quarter of the globe. In the middle of the room stood a small ebony table, the top inlaid with squares of ivory like a checkerboard. On it stood the hand of Buddha. It was the size of an infant's hand and carved from a solid piece of ivory, yellowed with unknown age. The curved, long nailed fingers clasped the stem of a delicately carved flower. It was a horrible object. It looked like a dead hand.

I could not repress my excitement as Lawrence locked the door and bade me bring him the box from a divan where he had placed it. I was surprised to see that his face was white and strained and that his hands trembled as he took the box from my grasp. He placed it on the table, and we took up our station near the door, both looking eagerly at the table. The air seemed heavy with some strong perfume, but that was undoubtedly the result of the long closed room with its sandalwood furniture and scented hangings.

Suddenly the table seemed to sway slightly and the hand toppled over, striking the box, and then Lawrence sprang back, with a hoarse shout, as the curved fingers loosened their hold on the flower and twined around and clung to the box. Gropingly they crawled over the carved flowers and birds; then, as we gazed breathlessly, a faint vapor curled around the edges of the box. It grew in volume, and I heard Lawrence unlock the door behind us. Then the lid raised. At first I could not see the object that protruded itself. Then its horrible form grew on my sight. The long, sinuous body of a serpent as large around as my arm issued from that tiny casket. Its red fangs were like crimson stains on the milky whiteness of its skin. It raised itself far above the table, the hideous head swaying to and fro, its green eyes gleaming like jewels in the semidarkness of the room and piercing the faint vapor that surrounded it. The incense seemed overpowering, and I felt that I was losing consciousness when Lawrence raised a revolver.

My hand was on the knob when he fired. A crimson stream flowed from the hideous thing, but still it raised its length into the air. Lawrence fired again and yelled for me to open the door. As I did so I heard a strangled cry and turned to see Lawrence falling to the floor, the white serpent coiled tightly around his body. Grasping a Turkish scimiter that hung on the wall beside me and mad with rage and grief, I thrust the gleaming knife again and again into the sinuous body of the reptile, which never relaxed its hold, its head still uplifted, with red fanged mouth and jeweled eyes. Suddenly everything turned black before me, and I lost consciousness. When I regained my senses the light was still burning dimly. The window draperies were stirring softly, and, to my joy, I heard Lawrence's voice calling in strained, unnatural tones. He was slowly struggling to his feet, and I arose and went to his assistance. His face was ghastly, and around his throat, above his low collar, was a dull purple line. He pointed to the floor as he sank feebly into a chair. The white serpent was gone, but on the dark rug lay a long chain composed of countless small disks of ivory strung together on a silken cord. The scimiter lay beside it, the blade spotless and shining. The air was still heavy with a strange, subtle perfume that clouded our senses and rendered the occurrences of the past hour unreal. On the table lay the ivory box empty. The hand of Buddha was gone. Near the open window and in the shadows of the stirring draperies lay a green silk cap in the middle of which was sewed a curious jeweled button, insignia of a mandarin's rank. As I leaned over to pick it up a yellow hand with curving, clawlike nails darted across the low sill and then disappeared into the outer shadows bearing the green cap.

Lawrence lived a week, and before he died he told me the story of Van Ping, and then I knew that the punishment that had been meted out to my friend was well deserved, and I could not avenge him because of that other one who had been justly avenged.

CHICAGO MERCHANT MAKES STATEMENT.

After Spending Thousands of Dollars and Consulting the Most Eminent Physicians, He Was Desperate.

CHICAGO, ILLS.—Mr. J. G. Becker, of 134 Van Buren St., a well-known wholesale dry goods dealer, states as follows:

"I have had catarrh for more than thirty years. Have tried everything on earth and spent thousands of dollars for other medicines and with physicians, without getting any lasting relief, and can say to you that I have found Peruna the only remedy that has cured me permanently.

"Peruna has also cured my wife of catarrh. She always keeps it in the house for an attack of cold, which it invariably cures in a very short time."

AN OWL STORY.

Showing the Tyrannous Effect of Habit Upon a Wild Animal.

An English publication tells this interesting story of an owl:

A vague figure appeared out of the clouds, traveling against the wind toward the spire and looking more like a ragged piece of newspaper whirled about the heavens than any living thing. It was a white owl, and after watching him for some time I came to the conclusion that he was trying to get to the vane of the spire. A very idle ambition it seemed, for, although he succeeded again and again in getting to within a few yards of the point aimed at, he was on each occasion struck by a fresh violent gust and driven back to a great distance, often quite out of sight in the gloom. But presently he would reappear, still struggling to reach the vane. A crazy bird!

But I could not help admiring his pluck and greatly wondered what his secret motive in aiming at that windy perch could be. And at last, after so many defeats, he succeeded and grasped the metal crossbar with his crooked talons. The wind with all its fury could not tear him from it, and after a little flapping he was able to pull himself up, and then, bending down, he deliberately wiped his beak on the bar and flew away.

This, then, had been his powerful, mysterious motive—just to wipe his beak, which he could very well have wiped on any branch or barn roof or fence and saved himself that tremendous labor. This was an extreme instance of that tyrannous effect of habit on a wild animal. Doubtless this bird had been accustomed after devouring his first mouse to fly to the vane, where he could rest for a few minutes, taking a general view of the place, and wipe his beak at the same time, and the habit had become so strong that he could not forego his visit even on so tempestuous an evening.

THE FOREST PEOPLE.

A Curious Scotch Settlement In the Heart of France.

Attention has been called in France to a little British settlement which still exists in the very heart of the country not far from Bourges, in the province of Berry. Its inhabitants have received the name Foretains, or forest people. Their history is a curious one.

In recognition of the services which John Stuart, constable of Scotland, rendered to the French nation one of its kings, Charles VII., 500 years ago granted him a park in the forest of Hautebrune and subsequently gave the Scotchmen whom he settled there the right also of feeding pigs and cutting wood in the adjacent royal forest of Allogny. They also were exempted from the payment of general taxes, salt tax or the dues levied by the neighboring town of Bourges, and finally a royal magistrate was appointed for their special benefit.

This magistrate used to sit booted and spurred, with his sword by his side, and for many years his decisions were given without appeal not only in all civil but in criminal cases as well which affected the proprietors or humbler inhabitants of the forest.

The Scotchmen cleared the forest of its old trees and planted instead orchards and then invited others of their countrymen to come and join them. Since then they have preserved something of their Scotch origin as well as their lofty, stalwart, active and vigorous form. They cultivate both beards and whiskers and both in accent and peculiarities of speech show their descent.

In dress they only differ from the inhabitants about them by wearing long leggings with spurs attached. Many of the names are Scotch or English, such as Talbot, Cromwell, Halliday and Godwin.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Whoever enjoys not life I count him but an apparition, though he wears about him the visible affections of flesh.—Sir Thomas Browne.

Common sense is the knack of seeing things as they are and doing things as they ought to be done.—Stowe.

Senator Oliver's Victory.

A tribute to his ability in presenting the matter and in giving it his attention on the floor was the action of the United States Senate last week in passing Senator George T. Oliver's bill to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for $41,890.71, representing interest paid on money borrowed to pay militia called to the defense of Gettysburg during the Civil war. The State borrowed $671,476.43 in August and September, 1863, to pay troops called into the service of the United States. The State repaid the loan, with interest, in 1864. The national government did not repay the principal sum until after an appropriation by Congress, in April, 1866. The State, through Senator Oliver, asked that it be reimbursed for interest from the time it borrowed the money until it was repaid. It did not ask for interest for the period between September, 1864, and April, 1865, the time when the government repaid the principal.

The matter had been presented to Congress on numerous occasions, only to fail for one cause or another. Some time ago Senator Oliver took the subject in hand. He introduced a bill covering the amount involved. He devoted to it his personal attention, secured a favorable recommendation from the Committee on Claims, and last week it came before the Senate for a vote Senator Page, of Vermont, opposed the measure, chiefly on the ground, as he argued, Pennsylvania sought to collect money on its own account. During the debate that followed, Senator Oliver handled the case with signal ability, turning one attack after another on the bill into an argument in its favor and in the end convincing a large majority of the Senate in the justice and merit of the claim. When the bill was finally passed Senator Oliver was warmly congratulated by many of his colleagues.

In explaining his bill to the Senate, Senator Oliver said:

"The purpose of this bill is to reimburse the state of Pennsylvania for some money that it paid out for interest on money borrowed in the summer of 1863 for the purpose of paying its militia called out to repel the invasion of the state during the Gettysburg campaign. The militia was called out at the urgent request of the secretary of war and when the time came to pay them there was no national appropriation out of which they could be paid. There was no available money in the treasury of Pennsylvania, and in response to the request of Secretary Stanton, the governor of Pennsylvania called together certain prominent business men and bankers in Philadelphia, and they, on their own credit, raised between $600,000 and $700,000, which was used for the purpose of paying these troops. They raised this money by giving their own notes for it and the loan was carried for something like a year, at the end of which time the legislature of Pennsylvania having met, passed a bill to reimburse them, and out of the funds the state paid them the amount of money they had borrowed, together with interest up to that date.

"Some two years afterward congress passed an act to reimburse the state, but when it came to a settlement with the secretary of war the secretary refused to pay the amount that the state had paid to the private individuals for interest, only paying the principal. So the state was actually out something like $45,000 or $46,000 of interest, which it had paid to its own citizens at the request of the secretary of war.

"I will state, that various other states have been repaid money for interest paid in like manner, and the question was finally adjudicated in the surpreme court in the case of the United States vs. the state of New York, which is reported in 160 United States reports. In that case the state of New York was reimbursed something like $130,000, which included interests that it had paid into its own sinking fund for its own bonds, in which the state had invested its sinking funds. The state of New Jersey had been reimbursed in like manner, and I understand that quite a number of other states have been reimbursed in like manner.

"It must be noted that the state here makes no claim for interest on any money that it advanced. It simply asks for the money paid out to its own patriotic citizens for money that they borrowed for the purpose of paying these troops, and only up to the date when the state paid the money to them. It demands no interest between the day of the payment by the state and the reimbursement of the state by the United States."

Planned--A Bigger Democratic Machine.

Observers of events political cannot but view the action of the Democratic State Committee, at Harrisburg last week, with considerable amusement. That action furnished another illustration of stirring up a big wind to divert public attention from the real scheme in hand. This time the party managers plan a harmony reunion—better party organization; in short, and to be honest about it, a bigger machine.

Before the assembling of the State Committee it was heralded abroad, and with much noise, that the wicked Donnelly & Ryan outfit, from Philadelphia, was to be picked up by the breeches and kicked out bodily from the Democratic party. There was to be no pink tea affair, but simply a plain, old-fashioned expulsion of those admittedly undesirable party bosses in Philadelphia. We had heard the same old story so many times that we hardly expected to see the promise made good this time, but in justice to all we waited to see the result at Harrisburg before reaching any conclusion.

The result was as we had anticipated. It was the same old game of marching the Democratic mule up the hill and then down again, for instead of kicking out Donnelly & Ryan the State Committee, with Guffey as usual in command, opened wide the door and fairly wept with joy over a harmony program. Donnelly & Ryan, not one particle different or better when they left Harrisburg than when they arrived for the meeting of the State Committee, were received with honors, allowed to pretty nearly run the show and finally were sent home with a new certificate of character.

All of which was what Donnelly & Ryan were playing for, what Guffey in advance had approved and ordered done, and what his willing tools meekly ratified. It is to be noted, in passing, that the Hon. C. LaRue Munson, and the Hon. William H. Berry and all the other honorables who are in the scramble for the Democratic nomination for Governor, were in Harrisburg at the time and participated in the action of the State Committee which gave Donnelly & Ryan another clean bill of health.

This talk of throwing out Donnelly & Ryan, who are Guffey's agents in Philadelphia, is mere bosh. The Democrats cannot throw out Donnelly & Ryan without eliminating Guffey, and they cannot eliminate Guffey without deciding to go down into their pockets and putting up the necessary cash to finance campaigns. For many years Guffey has been putting up the money to run the Democratic party in Pennsylvania. About all he has got out of it has been the empty honor of serving as a member of the National Committee. Even this was temporarily denied him but a short time ago. He probably is the most unselfish boss the Democratic party has had, in the last quarter of a century at least. Anything but a hypocrite, Guffey must have sat back in his seat and laughed up his sleeve as the wind-makers kicked up the dust and adjourned without harming a hair on the head of Donnelly & Ryan.

Mr. Guffey has been trying to pound it into the heads of the Democrats over the State that to win they must have organization; in other words, have a machine, and a good one, one well oiled and kept going. With Donnelly & Ryan, at the Philadelphia end, and a few others scattered over the State, Guffey has had a sort of a machine, but it was rusty in spots and here and there one or more wheels were worn out and broken. What he hammered into his followers last week was that a bigger machine must be created if the Democrats ever hope to get the offices, which after all is the chief Democratic aim even though it may be dressed up and presented with some other label. To create such a machine, he pointed out, harmony must prevail.

Mr. Munson, as a candidate for Governor, whooped it up for harmony and a bigger machine. Likewise Mr. Berry. State Chairman Dewalt, who is pretty nearly as smooth an article in the machine game as Guffey or Donnelly or Ryan, said: "Amen; let's us have the mach--I mean harmony." Clever Mr. Donnelly, he sat back and grinned and when he saw that it was time to put in his oar he, too, sounded the harmony slogan and with a loud hurrah.

In light of Mr. Munson's high-sounding phrases in the recent campaign, one naturally expected him to indignantly protest against such a program as was put through. But did he? Mr. Berry, the "only clean Democrat" in the State, should have voiced his protest against the publicly admitted fact that the Democratic party is out to create the biggest machine possible with the funds on hand and to be collected by a special committee of five. But did he?

Mr. Munson, instead of protesting, palavered to Guffey and hustled about with the announcement that he was willing to take any nomination that might come along. Mr. Berry was so busy hunting votes and also a smile of friendly recognition from Guffey that he had time for nothing else. Being candidates their view of things in general was shaped along practical lines—in favor of the proposed bigger and greater machine.

The Republican party in Pennsylvania has a splendid organization from one end of the State to the other. Because this organization is so perfect Democrats and fake reformers have secretly admired it and publicly called it a machine. Now we witness the Democrats planning for more perfect organization and enthusiastically bragging about it; in a word, planning a bigger machine and not caring a rap who knows it.

P. S.—Jim. Cornelius is a candidate for delegate from Centre County to the Democratic State convention, to be held at Allentown in June.

APPOINTED STATE TREASURER

Governor Stuart Names Former Congressman Wright for Vacancy.

Charles Fred Wright of Susquehanna county, cashier of the First National bank of Susquehanna and member of the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-eighth congresses, was on Monday appointed by Gov. Stuart to be state treasurer of Pennsylvania for three years beginning the first Monday of May next. The appointment is to fill the vacancy caused by the death of State Treasurer-elect Jeremiah A. Stober, of Lancaster county. As State Treasurer John O. Sheatz, whose regular term will expire on the first of May, has announced his intention of refusing to turn the office over to an appointee of the governor unless ordered to do so by the supreme court.

Mr. Sheatz will contest on the grounds that the death of the treasurer-elect does not create a vacancy, and that the incumbent is entitled to hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified.

The newly appointed state treasurer is a son of the late Chester Wright of Forest Lake and a brother of the late Myron B. Wright of Susquehanna. He was born in 1856 at Fort Lake, and was educated in the public schools and the Montrose academy. He was appointed teller of the First National bank of Montrose.

On removing to Susquehanna, in 1881, he was appointed assistant cashier of the First National bank, and later was made cashier. He is prominently identified with several business enterprises, including the Jefferson, Lackawanna & Wayne Chemical Company.

Gov. Stuart's right to appoint Mr. Wright will be tested in the supreme court at once. The governor's announcement that he had appointed Mr. Wright was barely made before Attorney General Todd inserted his name in the documents prepared to test the legality in the highest state court.

This action will be a quo warranto, with State Treasurer Sheatz as respondent. The court will be asked if there is a vacancy because of Mr. Stober's death and, if there is a vacancy, if the governor can fill it.

It is said about the capitol that the supreme court can pass upon such a question. The only matter being discussed is whether a writ will be issued returnable in 10 days, requiring the treasurer to show cause why he should not surrender the office to Mr. Wright on May 2, or a rule for Mr. Sheatz to show cause why such a proceeding should not be begun.

Was No "Call of the Wild."

The "Call of the Wild," a theatrical attraction booked for Garman's Opera House on Saturday afternoon and evening, of last week, refused to go on with the evening performance owing to the slim crowd present. The management contended that there were more complimentary tickets out than there were paid admissions. Manager Garman took the ground that the complimentary tickets had been used in advertising the attraction. The show management refused to reconsider its decision and as a consequence there was no performance.

IMPORTANT DEER CASE

Question of Remuneration for Caring for Wounded Animal.

An unusual case, involving remuneration for caring for a wounded deer is related by the Lock Haven "Express," which says:

"Sometime ago Bruce Kuntz, proprietor of the hotel at Hyner, was arrested at the instance of the state game commission for having a deer in his possession, which is contrary to law, and was given a trial before Alderman John P. Anthony, in this city. After hearing the testimony the latter gentleman reserved decision for several weeks and on Saturday discharged Mr. Kuntz, placing the costs on the county. However, when Mr. Anthony informed Charles Bartels, of Williamsport, attorney for the department, of his action that gentleman stated that they would appeal, hence a settlement has not yet been effected.

"It appears that over a year ago a young deer, in a crippled condition and almost dead from being chased by dogs, came to the premises of Mr. Kuntz, who took it in charge and like the good samaritan fed it and nursed the injured animal until the wounds healed and it was restored to its former condition.

"Then that gentleman turned it to its former habitats but again dogs chased it and the deer again returned to its benefactor. Mr. Kuntz gave it shelter and notified the state department of his action, requesting remuneration to the amount of about $70, or 20 cents a day for his care and for feeding the animal. He was notified to release the animal or allow an officer to come into possession of the deer, which was to be presented to a zoological park.

"The officials of the game commission state that a healthy young deer is worth but $35 and it would be folly and unbusinesslike to pay twice that amount for one that was crippled, and positively refused to consider Mr. Kuntz's proposition. Moreover, they caused the arrest of that gentleman for having a deer in his possession out of the regular season, which resulted in a complicated case and the end is not yet in sight.

"Before discharging Mr. Kuntz the alderman looked up authority on the subject and gave the case careful study then acted accordingly. Further legal proceedings will be watched with interest by the public generally, especially hunters.

A large number of women have accounts with us—enough to warrant us in providing a separate room for their use. Many women need advice in financial matters; particularly on the investment of money. We shall be glad to give our best advice in this important subject to anyone requesting it.

The married woman with a bank account in her own name can justly feel independent. As a rule the wife is the economical member of the household and as a class are more saving than men.

All married women should have bank accounts and pay the household expenses by check.

On account of the serious illness of the mother of Prof. R. L. Watts he could not be present to deliver the commencement address and sent as a substitute Prof. John A. Frizzell of State College. Prof. Frizzell, spoke along the lines of education and civic righteousness, his address being of interest and very timely.

POTATO CULTURE

Department of Agriculture Takes Up Subject With Farmers.

Pennsylvania farmers are urged to engage in potato culture, the subject being treated in an interesting and practical way in a bulletin just issued by the State Department of Agriculture.

The author is E. A. Rogers, of Brunswick, Me., who is described in the preface by Secretary of Agriculture N. B. Critchfield as "one of the great potato growers of the Eastern section of the country."

Eight years ago a bulletin on somewhat similar lines was prepared by Alva Agee, of State College, also a leader in the potato industry, and published as a department bulletin. It was so popular and helpful that the edition was long ago exhausted.

As a text to his work, Mr. Rogers compares Pennsylvania with other States in the matter of potato growing. Maine is shown to stand seventh in potato acreage planted, having 116,000 acres under cultivation for potatoes in 1908, while Pennsylvania at the same time stood third with 277,000. Maine, however, enjoyed an average of 225 bushels to the acre, being at the head of the list; no other State reached 100 bushels to the acre, Pennsylvania had only 72 bushels to the acre standing fifth in this line.

"Maine with her 116,000 acres planted," writes Mr. Rogers, "harvested a crop of 26,100,000 bushels, while Pennsylvania with an acreage planted of 277,000 acres, only harvesd 19,944,000 bushels, or, with 161,000 more acres planted, she did not harvest so many potatoes by over six million bushels.

"That this is wholly or largely the result of better climatic and soil conditions in Maine I do not believe. The conditions in Maine one year with another may be, and probably are, more favorable than the rule in Pennsylvania. From a thorough knowledge of Maine conditions. I have been able to compare them with the conditions I have found in my travels throughout Pennsylvania, and it is my firm belief that the attention given the culture, with protection against insects and blight, along with a crop rotation suited to the potato itself, has more to do with the great difference in yield found between the two States than mere soil and climatic conditions."

The writer adds that in sections of Pennsylvania where proper attention to detail is given of more than 300 bushels to the acre have been obtained and in one case the marvelous production of 500 bushels to the acre was obtained.

Daugherty vs. Nelson.

Danny Daugherty, ex-bantam weight champion of the world, makes his first appearance in the ring here next Thursday evening, April 21, at the Armory, where he will encounter Jack Nelson, of Glasgow, Scotland, in a scheduled six-round windup before the Armory Athletic Club. Daugherty has recovered his old time form and now is winning over some of the fastest boys in his class. No better boy to draw Daugherty out could have been secured than the rugged Scotchman, who is a natural bantam weight and does not know anything but slugging. His recent victory here over Pilkington makes him look good at present and he should give the clever ex-champion a great battle. The semi-final—Spangler, of Bellefonte, vs. Eastrick, of Williamsport—promises to be a slashing contest, fast and furious from bell to bell. Spangler is a strong little boxer, but he will have to go some to beat this Williamsport boy, who is preceded by a reputation which stamps him as the real goods. One classy preliminary and a battle royal, limited to fifteen minutes, will comprise the rest of the show.

A PASSING TYPE

The "Old Lady" Now Little More Than a Pleasant Memory.

We of this generation remember her well—the gentle old lady with hair of silver, crowned with honorable years and treasured memories, and slipping quietly into the shadows. In other days no home seemed complete without her presence, and the very dignity of her gentle grace added an indescribable charm to family life. She wore her years as a badge of distinction and did not begrudge exacting Time his toll. Her journey up the hill of life in the blazing sunlight of youth was replete with incidents with whose memory she loved to enrich her twilight hours. She left to others the activities of the present, the recollections of her day were yet of sufficient importance to absorb her interest, and she "went about doing good" in her own unobtrusive way. Her sphere of existence was limited, it is true, but to her retiring nature and old-fashioned ideas the familiar intercourse around the fireside appealed as no outside interests could ever do. She is rapidly becoming but a memory. The typical "old lady" of a generation or two ago has passed away forever. Here and there, in a few families who have not outlived the delightful customs that prevailed so extensively only a comparatively few years ago may be found some last exponent of her type, who is loved and honored by all who know her and who exerts in her own way a more lasting influence for good than do her independent sisters in their more aggressive lives.

We have been taught from early youth to reverense old age; and one of our proudest boasts as a civilized nation is that we have remained true to our teachings in this regard at least. In these more engaging times, however, there seems really to be no old age in the former acceptation of the term. It is true that the years add up just the same, but nature seems to have extended her lease of life and rejuvenated the human system. The dainty lace caps that once set so lovingly upon the white hairs have given way before the onslaughts of the hair-dresser, and the sombre black bonnet that tied with strings has long since been succeeded by the latest creation of the milliner's art. It is just as well, perhaps, that the period of a person's mental as well as physical activity can be lengthened to an almost indefinite extent, speaking comparatively, of course, for just so much more of life's joy will fall to his share, even at the risk of a corresponding increase of its sorrow.

The onward sweep of events, with its confusion of purpose and of noise of struggle and promise of power, attracts with tremendous force those who have hitherto been content to watch from afar. While the sphere of woman's activities is yet somewhat limited it has broadened enough to interest in no uncertain way many of the sex who have heretofore refrained from participation and who now eagerly welcome the opportunities presented in club life, settlement work and even politics. It is sometimes claimed that the monotony of home life and its endless routine of duties makes a woman old before her time, and that getting in touch with other interests, brushing against the outside world, rejuvenates her system and refreshes mind and heart to such a degree that the encroachments of age are not so easily distinguished.

Mental and physical occupation go a long way toward solving the problem of perpetual youth, and perhaps that is one reason why so many of the busy women of today absolutely refuse to grow old. The knitting needle period of a woman's life seems almost like ancient history, for the use of the steel and ivory needles of a generation ago has been forgotten in the fascinating preparation of "paper" or "easy" written for the edification of some fashionable gathering of notable women. The grandmother of the present day performs her social obligation side by side with the younger generation, and in every departments of endeavor brings the very best that is in her to bear upon the subject in hand.

But, after all, a familiar figure in home life passes away with the advent of the "new woman," and somehow the altered conditions do not seem to compensate for the loss of that which has long been dear to us. In a little while, perhaps, with the passing of this generation, there will be none left to illustrate the priceless charm of a real old age, when, sheltered in the heart of her flesh and blood, the loved one, shedding gently all and responsibility, dreams and drifts into eternity. Her place can never be filled, but the memory of her quiet figure, dignified in its very simplicity and strong even in its weakness, must ever be an inspiraiton to all those who have been so fortunate as to come under her influence. She moulded well the clay intrusted to her hands, and after her labors were over she found her recompense in the hearts she guided and her joy in the miracle she wrought.—Charleston News and Courier.

Too Cold For the Candle.

It is a cold climate in which a flame cannot keep itself warm. One of the scientists attached to the Peary expedition has personally told of the effect of intense cold on a wax candle that he tried to burn. The temperature was 35 degrees below zero, and its effects were felt not only by the members of the expedition, but even by the candle in question. It gave forth no cheery light such as might have been expected from it in other circumstances, and when it came to be examined it was found that the flame had all it could do to keep itself warm. The air was so cold that the flame was not powerful enough to melt all the wax of the candle, but was compelled to eat its way down, leaving a skeleton structure of wax in the form of a hollow cylinder. Inside this cylinder the wick burned with a tongue of yellow fire, and here and there the heat was sufficient to perforate the outer covering and leave holes of odd shapes which turned the cylinder into a tube of lacelike wax, through the holes in which the light shone with a strange, weird beauty.—St. Louis Republic.

Directions In London.

In London and throughout the tight little island the words "up" and "down" have a peculiar significance. In going to London from any part of England you go "up." In traveling in any direction from the capital you go "down." So in London itself everything goes "up" if it goes in the direction of the bank—that is, the Bank of England—and going from that center toward any of the points of the compass is to go "down."

The word bank, which is not only always spelled with a capital "B," but is always uttered with an impressiveness that suggests an initial letter of the largest type, may be said to be in a sense interchangeable with city, a term of equal dignity and value in the eyes of Englishmen and likewise invariably adorned with a capital "C."

The city does not mean London by any means. It means a certain limited section of London, the part where business is mainly carried on and where the great financial institutions stand.

A Poor Fit.

George Graham Vest once won a case for his client by a neat retort. To testify against Vest's client there was brought into court a certain witness whose ill favored countenance matched his unsavory reputation in the community. The man's testimony was most unfavorable to the defendant, and so, of course, Vest proceeded to discredit his story. As the witness was unkempt and poorly clad, his clothes hanging about him in innumerable folds and wrinkles, the counsel for the opposing side endeavored in their turn to make it appear that Vest was making capital of the poor appearance of the man. Mr. Vest, of course, denied this allegation in the course of his closing remarks, adding:

"Gentlemen of the jury, if that man's face fit him as well as his coat he would be a good looking man."

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

Close Range Duels.

During the first fifty years of the old American navy, 1798-1848, the mortality of naval officers resulting from duels was two-thirds that resulting from naval wars. In the eighty-two duels listed by a recent writer thirty-six men were killed, all naval officers except three civilians. The per cent of mortality was 22, or five times the mortality of the federal army in the civil war. One-half of those not killed in these duels were wounded. The large number of casualties was undoubtedly due to the short distance between the combatants, which customarily was only ten paces, or thirty feet. In a few duels the distance was even less. In the Barron-Decatur duel it was twenty-four feet and only twelve in the Bainbridge-Cochran duel.

Led by the Nose.

An analytical chemist was retained as a skilled witness some years ago where there were questions of analytical chemistry. There was one case where a farmer had bought some artificial manure, and he was being sued for the price of it. He resisted payment on the ground that the material had none of the qualities of manure at all. The expert chemist was one of the witnesses and had stated that, although the substance had the smell, it had none of the chemical qualities of manure. Under cross examination he was asked, if that was so, how did he account for hundreds of the best farmers having taken the manure for many years. "They must have been led by the nose," returned the witness. —Dundee Advertiser.

Advantages of Matrimony.

Friend—Did you lose anything in the Bustall bank?

Depositor—Not a cent.

"Well, well! If you knew the thing was going up, why didn't you say so?"

"I didn't know. I had to go off on business, so I left my wife some blank checks. She went shopping."

Accustomed to Luxuries.

Mr. Courting (exhibiting penknife)—This handle is pure silver. What do you think of that? Little Girl—Huh! That's nothing. Sister's teeth is on a plate of pure gold.

Undaunted.

Nervous Employer—Thomas, I wish you wouldn't whistle at your work. Office Boy—I ain't working, sir; I'm only just whistling.

Habit tends to make us permanently what we are for the moment.

Sachets for Dresser Drawers.

The use of blotting-paper in the construction of drawer sachets is something a bit novel, and really commendable. The paper absorbs and retains the sachet odor to a remarkable degree, and for this purpose alone is well worth using. Then it insures a smooth, neat sachet always in place and very easily made.

For a dresser drawer, procure the large sheets of blotting-paper eighteen by twenty-four inches in many colors at any stationer's.

By careful measurements, cut the blotting-paper to fit the bottom of the drawer. Should piecing be necessary, it may be done by pasting a strip of thin paper over the closely-joined blotting-paper edges.

Cut a single thickness of sheet wadding the exact size and shape of the blotting paper. Tear wadding apart carefully and sprinkle in the sachet-powder.

The outer covering, which may be of any dainty material-China silk, Japanese print or silkoline-should be cut an inch or two larger all around than the blotting-paper and wadding.

Turn the edges of this cover in around the wadding and baste loosely. This pad of wadding and silk is laid upon the blotting-foundation and stitched through and through on the sewing-machine, with a long stitch and a somewhat loose tension, about three eights of an inch from the edge.

A set of sachet for dresser and chiffonier drawers made with matching blue blotting-paper and silk or silkoline, either plain or figured, is a charming acquisition to a blue room.

Trunks sachets would be a most appropriate gift to a traveler, and a single sachet that fitted a hat or shirt-waist box, could scarcely fail of a welcome anywhere.

One day the front door bell at our house rang loudly. Aunt Sabriny, colored, who has lived with us for more than three decades, and knows all our visitors, hurried off to the door. We heard her in conversation a moment, and then she came back, vouchsafing no exclamation.

"Who was it, Aunt Sabriny?" I inquired.

GRECIAN PRISON LIFE

Little to Eat, No Distinction in Crime, Boy Prisoners.

I was strolling in the neighborhood of the Stoja Hadriana when a two-story building guarded by sentinels attracted my attention. Upon inquiry, writes Sigmund Krausz in the Chicago News, I found it to be the muncipal jail, and an accommodating officer politely offered to gain for me admission to it.

The prisoners apparently belonged to all classes of society, from the peasant in his picturesque national costume to the well-dressed merchant, and their features betrayed the most varied grades of intelligence. I was told that prisoners already sentenced and such as had not yet been interrogated by a Judge were mingled here, and that frequently weeks passed before the latter received a first hearing.

The food furnished the prisioners is said to be too little to live on and too much to starve on. If one of these poor fellows should happen not to have any relatives or friends to supply him with food he must depend for it on the compassion of his luckier companions in misfortune or suffer hunger.

Regarding sleeping accommodations the conditions are even worse. Twenty to thirty prisoners are crowded into one cell, which contains neither table nor chairs, and where the damp, filthy floor offers the only place for rest and sleep. There is no distinction made as to age or grade of crime, and old men and boys, murderers and simple drunkards, share the same cell, sleeping side by side and eating out of the same dish.

It is remarkable, however, that no sad faces are to be seen among these prisoners. On the contrary many of them look joyous, and some even to be supremely happy. Should they ever conspire to effect an escape it would be a small matter for them, as the prisoners have free communication with each other, and their guards as far as one can observe are of small number and decidedly negligent in the performance of their duties. There are no special obstacles put in the way of friends and relatives who wish to visit prisoners, and I myself observed inmates of ground floor cells, the windows of which opened on the street, entering into conversation with passersby and receiving food through the iron gratings.

The penitentiary buildings consist of an old monastery-like structure, on the surrounding walls of which sentinels are placed at intervals in such a way that the outer vicinity as well as the courtyards of the building may be watched at the same time. This is the sole penal institution of the country and it contains only long term and life prisoners, but they seem to enjoy much the same sort ~~of treatment which I had observed in the~~ municipal jail.

The prisoners move about freely in the semi-dark vaulted corridors and pay each other neighborly visits in their cells. Most of the doors were open and a glance into the rooms showed the inmates either slumbering on their cots, talking or busying themselves with some light work, which seemed more pastime than earnest occupation. Several individuals were loitering about into the courtyards, while others, like Neopolitan lazzaroni, were lazily squatting in the sunshine. Only a few cells were locked.

But by far the most interesting inmate of the penitentiary was a little boy of about five years, an orphan, whose father a long term criminal, had been allowed to keep the little fellow with him until further disposition. I venture to express an opinion as to the baleful influence which this life in the penal institution must have on the growing boy, but the director informed me that so far the contrary was the case and that the little fellow was seemingly exercising a beneficial influence on the prisoners, whose general pet he was and who overwhelmed him with toys and saved for him the choicest morsels of the prison fare.

Fresh Discovery of an Old Truth.

Helen's enjoyment of the party given in honor of her ninth birth-day was nearly spoiled by the ill-tempered outbreaks of a very pretty and well-dressed little girl who was among her guests.

A peacemaker appeared, however, in a plain and rather shabby child, who proved herself a veritable little angel of tact and good-will.

After her playmates were gone, Helen talked it all over very seriously with her mother. She summed it up in this piece of philosophical wisdom:

"Well, I've found out one thing, mamma, folks don't always match their outsides." —From Woman's Home Companion For April.

"Like the Rope of Ocnus."

Few persons who use the phrase "like the rope of Ocnus" to denote profitless labor know the significance of the expression or its great antiquity. "The Rope of Ocnus" was the name of a picture painted by Polygnotus, a distinguished Greek, who died in the fifth century B. C. He is reputed first to have given life, character and expression to painting. According to Pliny, he opened the mouth and showed the teeth of his figures, and he was the first to paint women figures with transparent draperies. Ocnus was a poor but industrious Greek, whose extravagant wife spent money as fast as he could earn it, and he related his troubles to his friend the painter. Polygnotus thereupon painted the picture of a man weaving a rope of straw, while behind him stood a donkey, eating the rope as fast as it was woven. It is pleasant to relate that the silent lesson had the desired effect upon the wife of Ocnus and that it was through her subsequent frugality and thrift that Ocnus ultimately rose to a position of great prosperity.—Minneapolis Journal.

Wart Superstitions.

Wart lore is voluminous. It is said that a wart will leave a person if a lock of his hair is cut from the nape of his neck without his knowing it; that a wart will result if a frog spit on one; that warts may be cured by rubbing them over with a black snail, which must afterward be impaled on a hawthorn; that if a bag containing as many pebbles as one has warts be tossed over the left shoulder it will transfer the warts to the person who picks up the bag; that if one take a piece of twine, make as many knots on it as there are warts, touch each wart with the corresponding knot and bury the twine in a moist place, saying, "There is none to redeem it beside thee," the warts will disappear, and so on ad infinitum.

Lord Bacon seriously wrote in one of his works how an intelligent and nonsuperstitious woman, the wife of an English ambassador, had cured his warts by rubbing them with a piece of meat and nailing the meat up on a window post in the sun.

Success.

The flower of true success may be gathered only by discerning persons who want it more than they want any other thing and who seek it through all the days of all the years. It has no imitation, is of but one variety and may not be pressed and dried between the leaves of any book, even the Bible. Its name is character. It is not a rare flower, accessible to only the few, but it is modest, of quiet mien and hue and is often hidden by the foliage and gorgeous blossoms of more spectacular plants, so that the merely casual eyes of those who hurry along the life path seem to miss it altogether. It grows indoors and out, in all seasons and weathers, and may be plucked by the black hands of the miner as well as by the hands of those whose time is given to less rugged and daintier tasks. The man who gathers character gathers success, no matter how he may be rated by the commercial agencies.—Richard Wightman in Metropolitan Magazine.

Locked In With a Maniac.

The writer was once closeted with a patient whom he had no suspicion of being mad until the latter got out of bed, turned the key of the door and preferred a mild request to the writer to have his throat cut, handing him at the same time an open pocketknife, which he produced from underneath his pillow. I objected to the knife as being too small for the purpose and begged to be allowed to go for my case of amputating knives, with which, I explained, the operation could be performed with greater neatness and dispatch. He unlocked the door at once, binding me over to secrecy and urging me to lose no time in returning. I drove home, reported the case to the authorities and came back with assistance. He was secured with great difficulty and sent to the asylum.—London Tit-Bits.

The Woman In Russia.

"Love your wife like your soul and beat her like your carpet." This is a Russian proverb. Another of the same spirit, "Not long hurt the bumps from a loved one's thumps." Wives have undoubtedly been subjected to much ill treatment in Russia, where most husbands have always held to the opinion that "liberty spoils a good wife." Some Russian proverbs are cynical as to the delights of matrimony, and most married men know how to say, "Wed once, wail always."

Young Wife—Yes, dearest. I'm going to favor you at dinner tonight with a new cake that I invented all by myself. Young Husband (gloomily)—Say, I guess this will be a good night for me to bring Jim Taggart home to dinner. I don't like Jim.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

BIRDS OF PARADISE.

Their Dancing Parties and Arrows With Blunt Heads.

Birds of paradise molt about January, and in May, when they are in full and gorgeous new plumage, the males assemble each morning for their dancing parties. Certain trees are selected, being chosen on account of widespreading branches and scattered leaves, and in one of these trees from a dozen to twenty of the birds will assemble. They raise their wings, stretch out their necks and elevate their exquisite plumes, keeping them in a continual vibration. The birds hop or fly from branch to branch apparently in the greatest excitement, so that the tree appears to be seething with golden orange plumes. The long, plumy tufts which are the pride of the bird of paradise spring from the sides beneath each wing, and when the bird is in repose they are partly concealed, but during the "dance" the wings are raised vertically across the back, the head is bent and stretched out, and the long plumes are expanded until they resemble two magnificent golden fans, striped with deep red at the base and fading off into a pale brown tint at the finely divided points.

It is hard to determine just what is the motive of the dance of the birds of paradise, but the natives take advantage of the occasion to secure specimens of the birds without injury to the feathers. As soon as it is found that the birds have fixed upon a particular tree for their dances a native builds a little hut or blind of palm branches among the leaves and here ensconces himself just before daylight armed with a bow and a number of arrows with a round knob upon the end, instead of a sharp point. A boy waits at the foot of the tree, and when the birds have assembled and begun their dance the hunter begins to shoot. The blow of the blunt arrow stuns a bird, which falls to the ground and is secured by the waiting boy, not a drop of its blood being shed and the plumage being uninjured. The other birds rarely take any notice of those that fall until their number has been considerably reduced.—Harper's Weekly.

ILL TIMED APPLAUSE.

It Distracts the Players and Annoys the Audience.

Applause, the strongest tonic to the actor, sometimes annoys your true artist. If it halts the action of the play too long or if it drowns the sentence just begun it is exasperation to the judicious in the audience. The brighter the dialogue the more irritating is anything that distracts from it. It is the fashion at our theaters, especially on first nights, to greet each player vociferously in such a way as to mar the pleasure of the performance, if it contains any.

Here is a practice from which the thoughtless or the overenthusiastic should forbear. It may take the mind of the actor off his work in hand if he is the object of a great deal of applause and may have the like effect on some who do not receive any such mark of esteem when others are getting a too generous share of it.

There is plenty of time between acts for this handclapping, which the players can appreciate much better than when they are taxing their memories for the text of their parts and trying to concentrate on their work. It is not in good taste to approve with mere noise a scene or a situation when the enjoyment of it by one's neighbor may be heightened by the absence of such distraction. There is vast room for the improvement of general playhouse manners, but inconsiderate and promiscuous approbation of acting while the story is flowing from the stage is one of the chief drawbacks to enjoyment of the drama. Encouragement by managers to such custom in the mistaken belief that it adds to the general pleasure of patrons is largely responsible for its increasing bane.—New York Press.

Fly Travelers.

Among the things that furnish occupation for the eyes and minds of transatlantic voyagers are the houseflies that accompany the great steamships from one side of the ocean to the other. In fine sunshiny weather the flies buzz cheerfully about sheltered places on the decks, and when the wind blows high they take refuge in cabins and saloons. Flies often remain with the ship while in port and return with her on her next trip, thus crossing the ocean several times in succession and perhaps spending the entire season at sea.—New York Tribune.

Handicapped.

"Fain would I write a poem on the delights of fishing," sighed the poet, "but woe is me. I can't find a word to rhyme with angleworm."

"But why use that word at the end of a line?" queried the friend.

"Because," hissed the poet between his set teeth, "an angleworm is always at the end of a line."

And for an hour the silence was so still that one could have heard a pin drop.—Chicago News.

An Old, Old Story.

"Well?"

"And she gets the other half before the week is up."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Shot That Made Trouble.

An odd incident happened in the then Danish West Indies in the last century that nearly caused serious international complications. An American marksman, paying a visit to Charlotte Amalia, amused the governor by an exhibition of his skill with the rifle. Sitting on the veranda of the government house, he said that he could cut with a bullet the signal halyards on the flagstaff of the fort and lower the Danish standard to the ground. As the lines were almost invisible in the distance the governor was willing to bet that he could not do it. The shot rang out, and the flag fell. Presently a horseman dashed up, informing the governor that some one had fired on the flag. There was great excitement. The governor, none too popular, it seems, with the military, ruined his political future by admitting that the affair was a joke in which he connived. Report being sent to Copenhagen, highly colored, of course, by the commandant, his excellency was summarily removed.

Cultivating Ginger.

Ginger is made a matter of scientific culture in Jamaica. It is propagated by cutting up small pieces of the root, and, if possible, rich, cool soil from recently cleared woods is selected for it. It is a great impoverisher of the soil and grows so luxuriantly that in a short time a little piece of root will spread so as to produce nearly a pound of new roots. The sets are planted in March or April and get to their full growth about September. The roots are dug usually in Jamaica in January or February. They are washed, exposed to the sun until thoroughly dried and packed in parcels of about a hundred pounds each. In order to dry them more rapidly they are first scalded in a little copper pot in order to destroy life, of which the roots are very tenacious. White ginger and black ginger are from the same roots, the difference arising from methods of curing. Roots for sugar preserving are dug while quite young, before the stems are more than five or six inches high.

A Luckless Word.

Superstition dies hard, at least in the north of England. On Tyneside it is reckoned highly unlucky to hear or mention the word "pig," and evil consequences can only be averted by touching cold iron. If that material is not at hand its name must be uttered aloud as the next best thing.

It is no uncommon thing to see a group of sailors or workmen suddenly scatter to lay hold of iron railings, lampposts, etc., when by chance "pig" has slipped into their conversation.

A stranger to the district was no long ago puzzled to see four little shoeblacks, squatted at a game of cards on their blacking box, suddenly scramble to their feet, run to some iron posts several yards away, touch them and then return and resume their game quite unconcernedly. When he obtained an explanation his amusement equaled his astonishment. The origin of the superstition seems to be unknown.—London Scraps.

Uses Animals Make of Their Tails.

Horses, cows and other creatures use their tails as fly flappers. Cats, squirrels and many more twist them around their necks for comforters. The rat has raised the use of the tail to a fine art, for by its means it guides the blind and steals jelly, oil and cream out of jars and bottles. The macaco plays as merrily with its tail as a kitten does, and the marmoset while it sleeps uses its tail as a sort of blanket. The raccoon catches crabs with its tail. Every one knows how the monkeys journey through pathless forests by swinging from tree to tree, while the fishes steer their way through the water by their tail fins. The ant eater puts up its big bushy tail for an umbrella. The vanity of the peacock is fed by the beauty of its tail.—Dumb Animals.

A Chemist's Happy Thought.

The guests at a ball given at the Tuileries, Paris, were once distressed by something in the air which irritated everybody. The most famous chemist of the day was consulted as to the mysterious cause. His son-in-law, Dumas, had the happy thought that perhaps the irritating particles in the air came from the wax candles. He found on analysis that these candles had been bleached by chlorine. Immediately they were lighted a compound was added to the air that irritated throats and noses. This chance discovery led Dumas to study the whole effect of chlorine, with farreaching results in chemistry.

The many friends of E. J. Williams, the very efficient chief clerk for the County Commissioners, will be glad to learn that he has recoverd from the serious illness which for a few days occsioned no little alarm. Mr. Williams, it will be recalled, was seized with an attack of acute indigestion while at work at the Court House. He was removed to his apartments and later was taken to his home in Unionville. There, under the care of physicians and with the careful nursing of Mrs. Williams, he very agreeably surprised everybody by immediately making a splendid rally. He soon regained his strength and for the last few days has been able to be about.

During the evening a dainty luncheon was served. Census Supervisor Samuel R. Hamilton, while in town on Monday, visited his numerous friends at the Court House and succeeded in having a lot of fun at the expense of some of the county officials. Representing himself as a Mr. Smith, of Philipsburg, he declared to Commissioner Zimmerman that his property had been assessed entirely too high, that the entire proceeding was an outrage and that if Republican officials could do no better he certainly could no longer accord that party his support. Commissioner Zimmerman explained that the proper course for "Mr. Smith" would have been to file an appeal, whereupon "Mr. Smith" angrily asserted that appeals were useless and never amounted to anything, anyhow. Commissioner Zimmerman concluded that he had an old-fashioned crank to deal with and being by nature a very polite man, tried his best to pour oil on the supposedly troubled waters. Finally it dawned on him that a man, closely resembling the visitor, had been in to make a loud protest to Commissioner Woodring several months ago. It took him just about two seconds to put one and one together, and then with a broad smile on his face he calmly advised "Mr. Smith" to "go chase himself."

BOOMING PHILIPSBURG

Residents Hold Enthusiastic Meeting to Boost Their Town.

The hustling town of Philipsburg has set a pace for sister communities in the matter of booming things in general and striving to become bigger and greater in every respect. On Friday evening of last week a rousing mass meeting was held to stir up interest in the movement to keep Philipsburg to the front. Everybody who was present voted that the project was a winner and one which other towns might well adopt.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Philipsburg Commercial Travelers' Association and was attended by public officials, business and professional men and mechanics and laborers. Howard Sergeant, vice president of the association, presided, and A. C. Thompson delivered the opening address, pointing out the many advantages offered by Philipsburg to manufacturers seeking for a place to invest. C. M. Laribee, of Williamsport, a member of the Board of Trade of that city, made the principal address of the evening. He outlined how Williamsport had proceeded in obtaining new industries and urged that Philipsburg adopt a like course.

Those who served as vice presidents at the meeting were the following: Former Representative P. E. Womelsdorff, R. H. Zerby, D. Ross Wynn, John Edwards, George Scott, Capt. C. T. Fryberger, George W. The Base Ball Situation.

The base ball situation, in regard to forming a Cental Pennsylvania Leagu , is rather confused and indefinite although it is believed that the next week or ten days will determine matters one way or another. St. Mary's, which was one of the towns regarded as likely to enter such a league, has virtually decided not to do so, although a more favorable decision may be received from that town in the next few days. The proposed meeting, to be held at Bellefonte, to formally organize the league, will not be called until St. Mary's and one or two other towns reach some definite decision as to what they will do.

Tribute to Late John Jenkins.

The Milton "Evening Standard" publishes the following:

"In a personal letter to the editor, Mr. F. M. Kelly, of Altoona, formerly of Milton, pays the following tribute to the late John Jenkins: "I cannot refrain from congratulating the school board and good people of Milton on the beautiful and unique manner in which they propose to perpetuate the memory of my friend, John Jenkins. It is a most fitting and deserved tribute to one of nature's noblemen and will prove more lasting than granite or marble. By future generations it may be asked: Who was John Jenkins? and methinks it will be passed from one generation to another that he was a grand man, a good man, a true and helpful man, a loyal citizen, ever aiming for the betterment of his fellows and filling his sphere in life most completely, hence 'The John Jenkins Field Day' and many a youth will get inspiration therefrom. Dear old Milton never did a grander thing and personally I feel very grateful for such a beautiful and lasting tribute to one who was most dear to me."

Fishburn, of Pine Grove Mills, and is well and favorably known. She is a splendid young lady and qualified in every way to grace a home. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Reed, also of Pine Grove Mills, and is an industrious young man, one of the type which make good husbands. The calithumpians gave Mr. and Mrs. Reed a joyous celebration.
